01 / INTERIOR MASTER

The wash-n-dry

Fulton Street · Thursday afternoon

SELECTED REFERENCE 01

THE LOOK

A working neighbourhood laundromat, not a polished period set. Chipped enamel, stained linoleum and tired green paint make the place feel used every day.

DESIGN / STAGING

Flat fluorescent light inside; pale, dirty daylight through the windows. Keep the composition horizontal and grounded at human height.

CONTINUITY LOCK

The screenplay specifies six washers; the sixth clanks. This selected master is a mood and layout reference, not an exact machine count.

02 / STREET AND DOOR

The threshold

Sunny's Wash-n-Dry · Brooklyn, 1975

SELECTED REFERENCE 02

THE LOOK

A battered green storefront on a lived-in Brooklyn block. Sunlight at the open door contrasts with the sickly fluorescent interior.

DESIGN / STAGING

The doorway connects the room to the unseen street. Keep the offscreen exchange outside; the man is not identified in this scene.

CONTINUITY LOCK

Peanut pushes through the propped door. On his laugh, glimpse only a cigarette cherry and a gold pinky ring, not a face.

03 / FIXED DRESSING

Table continuity

Towels, newspaper and two quarters

SELECTED REFERENCE 03

THE LOOK

Keep one neat stack of off-white towels at the back-right of the folding table and one newspaper toward the front until Peanut picks it up.

DESIGN / STAGING

The battered table stays in place across the brothers' coverage. Preserve the stained surfaces and the washer-left / table-right geography.

CONTINUITY LOCK

Peanut reads the Daily News, then slaps two quarters on the machine. The voted quarters still places them on the table; use the screenplay's blocking for the final shot.

04 / HAND PROP

Bug's recorder

One recorder · one wired microphone

SELECTED REFERENCE 04

THE LOOK

A compact beige-grey shoebox cassette recorder with visible tape transport and meter. The complete handheld microphone remains connected by its cable.

DESIGN / STAGING

Place the recorder beside Bug on a washer. One recorder, one microphone: no added radio or boombox. The reference PNG has genuine transparency.

CONTINUITY LOCK

Bug records the washer, returns and labels the cassette DRYER BEAT. Later he makes the beat by physically splicing tape, not with a sampler.
